- There are no laws that require cosmetics or personal care companies to test ingredients or products for safety before they are sold. There are known carcinogens, endocrine disruptors, (gender benders) and allergens in the majority of cosmetics and personal care products.
- Federal law does not require that the ingredients in 'fragrance' appear on the label. Fragrances are usually mixtures of many chemicals. There are 3,163 different fragrance chemicals. For example, Diethyl phthalate is a common fragrance chemical that is linked to sperm damage.
- There is no regulation of marketing terms and product claims. 'Natural, gentle, organic, non-irritating, free of harsh chemical ingredients, pediatrician recommended, dermatologist approved, anti-aging' can mean anything or nothing at all.
- All chemicals penetrate the skin and many do significantly. Over half of personal care products contain petroleum solvents that act as penetration enhancers which drive chemicals deeper into the skin. Many are known to have neurotoxic effects and may cause reproductive abnormalities.
- Children are at particular risk because their skin is thinner and their detoxification systems are still developing.
- Studies have found cosmetic ingredients like phthalate plasticizers, paraben preservatives, the pesticide triclosan and harmful sunscreen chemicals inside the bodily fluids of men, women, children and even the cord blood of newborn babies.

"We live in a profoundly toxic age...to simply replace toxic products with non-toxic alternatives is one of the most effective methods to reduce the chance of future degenerative disease."
